Who to share with?
The welfare state in a multi-ethnic society.

Mia Gandenberger, Angie Gago, Carlo Knotz, Giuliano Bonoli, Flavia Fossati, Francesco Maiani, Faculty of Law, Criminal Justice and Public Administration, University of Lausanne, miakatharina.gandenberger@unil.ch

How do societies decide on who to help and who to exclude from redistributive arrangements?

We investigate the interplay between immigration, diversity, and the propensity of societies to reduce inequalities through redistribution. To that end, we examine the perceived deservingness of immigrants to access the welfare state and study how states respond to expected increases of immigrants by reforming welfare state legislation.

What people want...
Assessing immigrant’s deservingness

This project investigates the welfare state in the context of the migration – mobility continuum. We situate different types of immigrants on this continuum and study how factors such as length of residency or contributions influence natives’ perceptions of migrant’s and mover’s deservingness to participate in the welfare state.

What states do...
Reforming welfare states

Output:

References: